Köşk Höyük

Köşk Höyük is an ancient settlement in Niğde Province, Bor district, Bahçeli town, Turkey.

B.C. The settlement was abandoned as a result of the fire in 5000 BC.

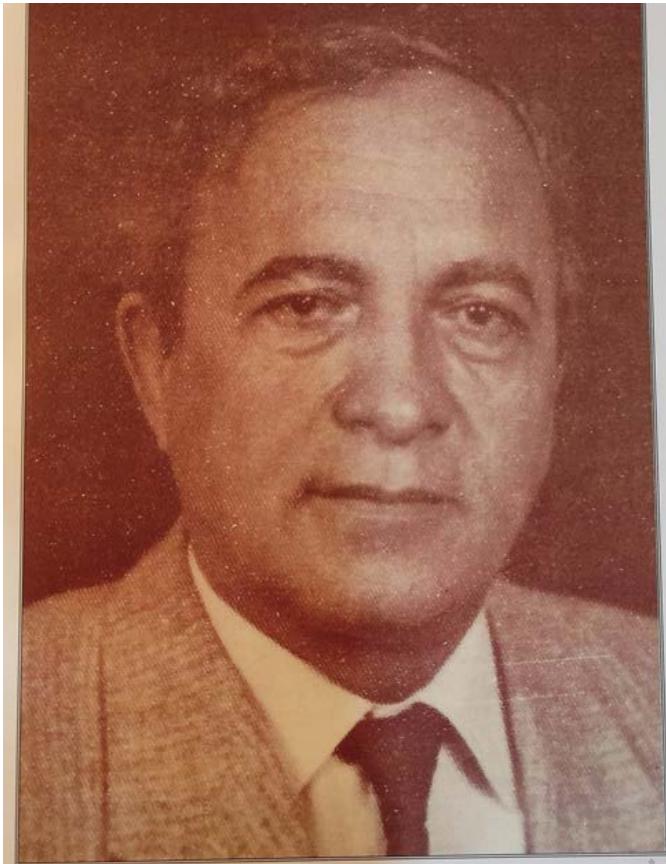

General view from the south.

The houses are very close to each other. Sometimes there are streets, narrow passages and squares.

The settlement was discovered in 1964 during the Central Anatolian Survey conducted by Richard Harper and Margaret Ramsden. It was revisited in 1965 by Ian Todd.

The mound measures 100x90 m and has a 4-6 m high cultural fill.

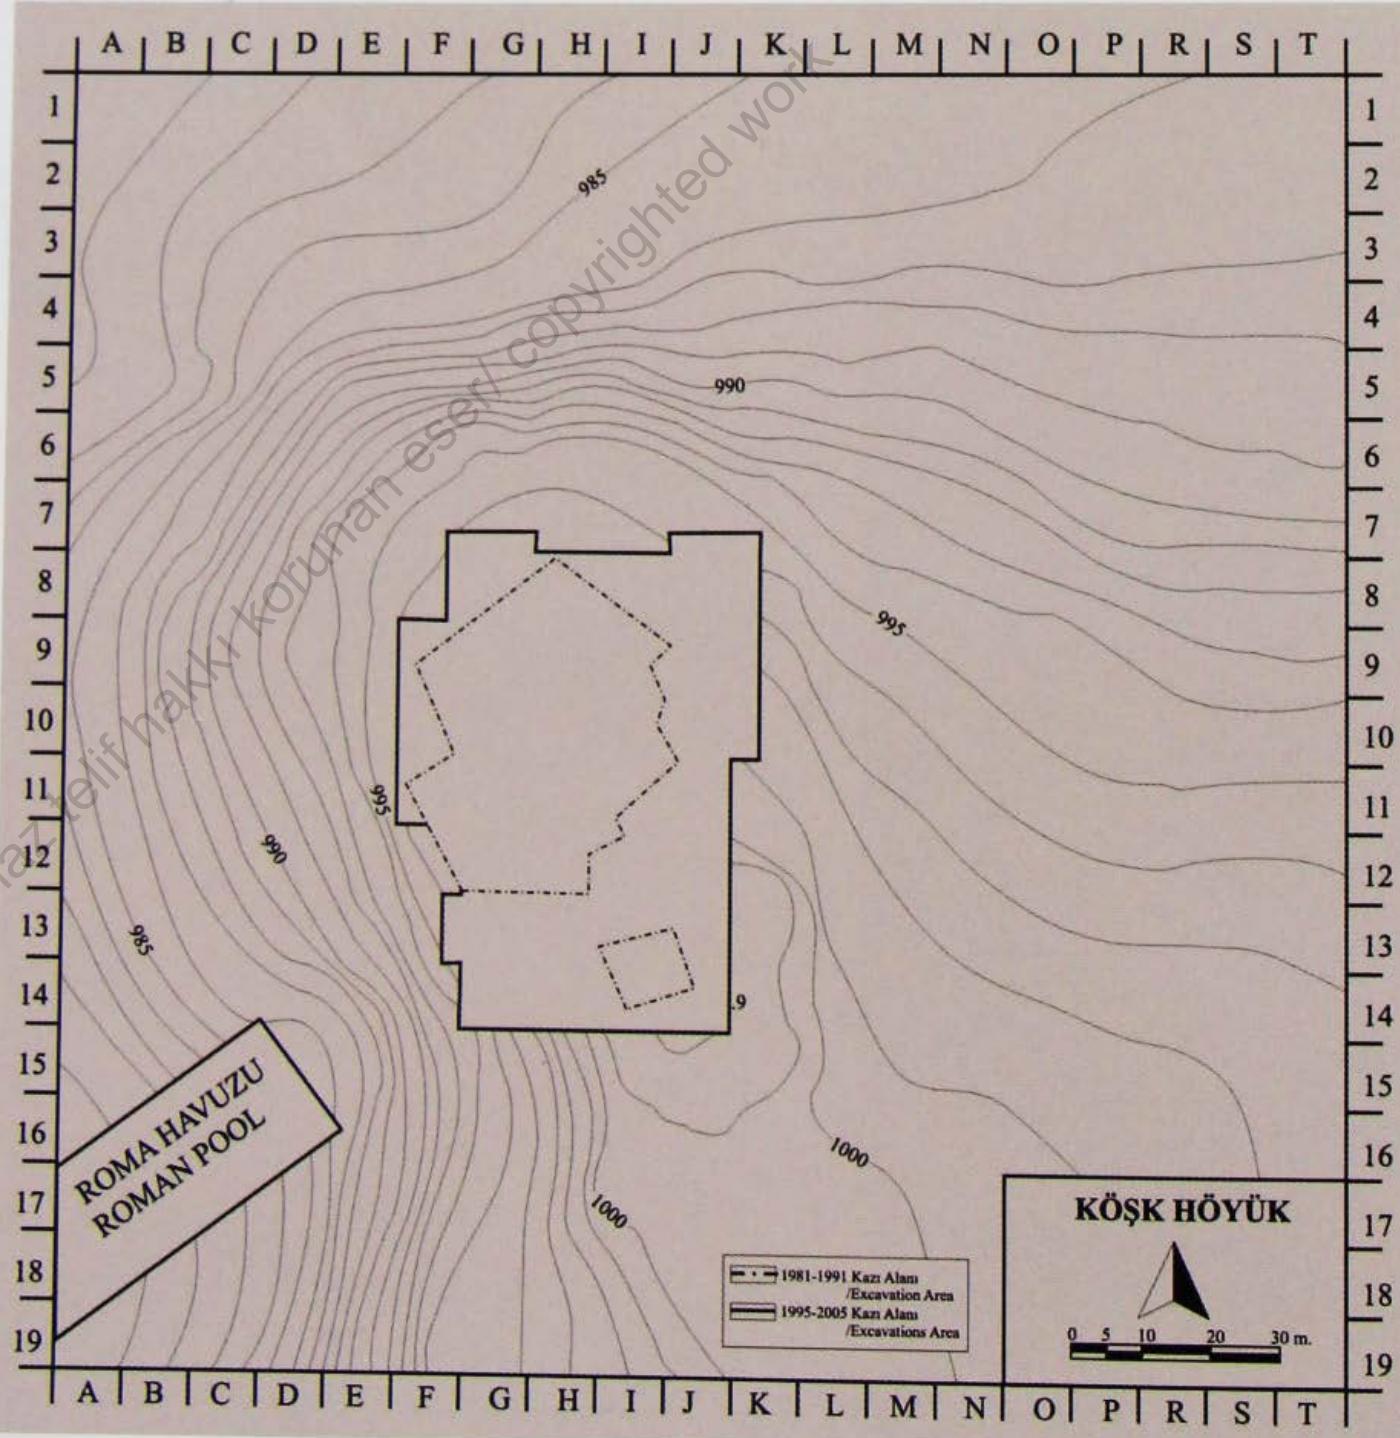

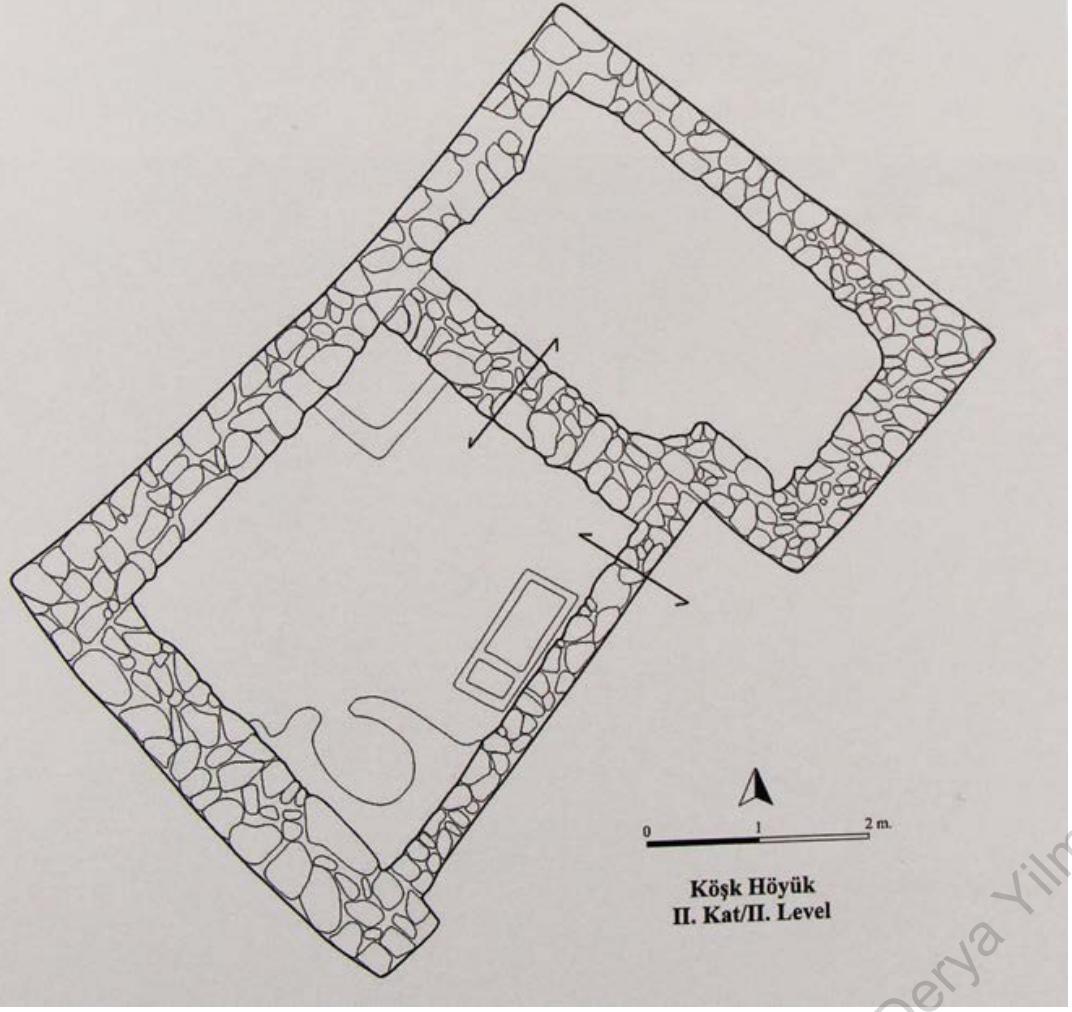

Kösk Höyük was possibly an important obsidian trade center both in the Neolithic and in the Chalcolithic Periods. The mother goddess figurines; bulls' heads and polychrome ceramics at the site of Kösk Höyük have many similarities with the sites of Çatalhöyük; Can Hasan and Hacilar.
