- A Brief Explanation: The Syrian humanitarian crisis, which has turned from local protests to wars, is almost 11 years old. As a natural consequence of this war, which became multilateral in time, the country's social system and physical infrastructure was destroyed. With the deepening of the crisis, violence and human rights violations in Syria have increased. In parallel, thousands of Syrians have been killed and millions forced to flee their homes. The events in Syria deeply affected the Middle East, especially the countries bordering Syria, with refugee flows, and Turkey was one of the countries most affected by this humanitarian crisis. Millions of Syrian refugees have come to live in Turkey with temporary protection status and it is still unclear whether they will be able to return.
- Prepare homework on Syrians who came to Turkey with the forced migration as a result of the humanitarian crisis and share the history, the spatiality, the social, demographic, economic and political consequences of the migration of Syrians.
